

Converging Streams? A Report on Dialogue between Formal and Non- Formal Leadership Development Practitioners

Chiang Mai – 24 May 2017

Leadership Development Consultation

Affirmations

- The presence of mutual strengths and limitations and the need for more collaboration and mutual learning.
- This conversation must manage tensions between quality and quantity, as well as between heart and mind.
- The need for formal theological educators to listen more to those who are engaged at the grass-roots, particularly among thriving movements toward Christ.
- What constitutes quality must be two-way conversations, with formal theological educators listening to non-formal programs as well as the other way around.
- The need for a strong platform that resources and speaks for the work of non-formal training, much in the way that ICETE does for formal theological education.
- We affirmed that this conversation should and must continue.
